Excerpt from book: OSCAR WILDE IN AMERICA. An interesting account of Oscar Wilde, at the time of his American tour, was given in the Lady's Pictorial a few weeks after his arrival in New York, the city which he described as one huge Whiteley's shop. He was interviewed in a room which was intensely warm and the sofa on which the poet reclined was drawn up to the fire. An immense wolf rug, bordered with scarlet, was thrown over it and half-encircled his graceful form in its warm embrace. Wilde was wearied. In a languid, half-ennervated manner he gently sipped hot chocolate from a cup by his side. Occasionally he inhaled a long, deep whiff from a smouldering cigarette held lightly in his white and shapely hand. He was attired in a smoking suit of dark 263 brown velvet faced with lapels of red quilted silk. The ends of a long dark necktie floated over the facing like sea-weed on foam tinged by the dying sun. Dark brown nether garments, striped with red up the seam, and patent leather shoes with light cloth uppers completed the rest of the poet's costume. His favourite colour is said to have been something between brown and green, a tint that never was on sea or sky, and he had a complete suit made of it. A white walking-stick which he was in the habit of carrying was presented to him at the Acropolis and was said to have been cut from the olive groves of the Academia. Only in the evening was he wont to don knee breeches, but evening and morning alike, adds his interviewer, find him neither more nor less than a man, and always a perfect gentleman. Long masses of dark brown hair, parted in the middle, fell in odd curves of beauty over his broad shoulders. He wore neither beard nor moustache. The full, rather sensuous lips, now pressed close together with momentary tension, now pa... Scales describing language proficiency in a series of levels can provide orientation for educational programmes, criteria for assessment, and reporting to stakeholders. However, in most cases such instruments are produced just by expert opinion. A scale of language proficiency actually implies a descriptive scheme related to theory but usable by practitioners. It also implies a methodology for scaling content to different levels. This book describes the use of both qualitative and quantitative techniques to develop scales for the « Common Reference Levels » in the Common European Framework of Reference for modern languages. Short stand-alone descriptors were (i) developed and classified, (ii) refined and elaborated in workshops, and then (iii) scaled by analyzing the judgments of one hundred teachers on the English language proficiency of the learners in their classes. Each unit of Speakout opens with a clear overview of the content and learning objectives. The course covers all 4 skills areas as well as grammar and vocabulary and functional grammar. Each unit culminates with a DVD lesson based around an extract from a real BBC programme. The Active Book includes: Easy navigation of the Students' Book pages with zoom facility Video and audio available at the touch of a button Video Podcasts with accompanying worksheets BBC programme clips that can be played in a DVD player or computer The True Colors Power Workbook contains a variety of written exercises and activities that give students additional practice; challenging activities that focus on grammar and emphasize meaningful and personalized practice; and preparation for official tests. True Colors jumpstarts real communication, preparing students for success outside of class. The course distinguishes between receptive and productive activities because students can understand more difficult material than they can produce. It connects social language and grammar so that grammar is taught with both meaning and purpose, and balances presentation, practice, and production of language.
